Midwest Molly – Looking For Tomorrow

Looking For Tomorrow is another insightful gem from Midwest Molly. Their third single again showing their writing prowess and commitment to delivering at their very high standards.

A stirring, soulful track that you can't help but feel, with Kate's vocals recorded late at night to meet the magic of the song.

"I came home to say a few prayers and bid adieus, to those few, who used to care."

The story circles back to the ever present past connections with family or friends who just can't understand this road.

"I promised I'd be done, but it's a long road, looking for tomorrow. "

The struggle on this long and often lonely road, always seems to be matched just barely by the unfading hunger to keep going.

These are emotions and life experienced by many a country town departee, but rarely told so well.

'Every person has their own journey. And every journey has its moments when it's not easy. This song is a shout out to all those people who aren't quitters.'

Artwork: The artwork quickly reminds of the adventure spirit and innocence of a child still dwelling within this determined road worn adult.
